

If an Employee Contracts a COVID-19 Infection

This leaflet shows what to do in case an employee is infected with a new coronavirus.
For actual measures, please follow the instructions of healthcare centers and medical institutions.

If an employee has a fever or other cold symptoms

- If an employee has symptoms of a cold, such as a fever, tell them not to come to work, to contact their home doctor or nearest medical institution, and to follow their instructions.
※ Symptoms of new coronavirus infection are said to include fever, respiratory symptoms (cough, sore throat, runny nose, nasal congestion), headache, fatigue, and abnormalities in the sense of smell and taste.

If an employee is confirmed to be infected

- In the event of an investigation by a health care center, please provide accurate information about the employee's health, work status, and contact with customers and other employees.
- Each store is responsible for disinfection of its facilities and equipment. Depending on the situation, the healthcare center may provide guidance on disinfection, so please follow it.
- For emergency disinfection, wipe with alcohol (ethanol for disinfection (70%) or sodium hypochlorite (0.05% or more), focusing on areas where people's fingers make frequent contact. (doorknobs, switches, handrails, etc.).

Business operators who handle food and other products do not need to suspend operations or take measures such as shutting down or disposing of food products, as long as general hygiene management, such as physical condition management of food handlers and frequent washing of hands, is carried out at each stage of production, distribution, cooking, sales, etc.

If an employee was found to contact closely with the infected people

- An employee who is suspected by the healthcare center of having closely contacted with the infected person should be kept at home as soon as possible.
- An employee who is confirmed to have closely contacted with the infected person will be required to undergo PCR testing as directed by the healthcare center and health observation will be required while remaining at home for 14 days from the last contact with the infected person.
